Reimagine Design Histories

Swiss style

There is minimal imagery used within swiss style pieces, when used the typography mostly forms an image or is positioned in such a way that it removes the need for much imagery. Because of this Typography plays a massive role, ensuring the clean and legible finish to the works within the movement. Using simple, sans-serif typefaces to clearly translate the movements one key principles. The typography is often either placed vertical, horizontal or at a 45 degree angle within the page, placed within a heavily enforced grid system it gives a clean finish to works. However it also means that if the grid system is broken on rare occasion then it gives a different finish that can pull focus more dramatically across the page or change the hierarchy entirely.

International typographic style (also known as swiss style) was developed first in Sweden within the 1950s, key characteristics that make this style unique are that pieces of work within this style generally tend to emphasize elements such as; cleanliness and legibility. As well as layouts normally being asymmetrical utilizing grids aswell as most often using a sans serif font. Helvetica being a particularly popular font for pieces of work within this style. International Typographic style is somewhat of an overarching movements where other movements, such as De Stijl and Bauhaus are often included in timelines detailing key events within International Typographic Style. Flat style using bold, easily distinguishable colours and block shapes.

Josef Muller Brockmann

Josef Muller Brockmann is a graphic designer influenced by the ideals of many different art movements, some of these include; Russian Constructivism as well as De Stijl and Bauhaus. Since the art movements he is influenced share many similarities it makes sense for him to become one of the most well-known Swiss designers. Some of his most famous works are the poster advertisements that he created for the Zurich Town Hall. Alongside creating posters and graphic he also published several books, including The Graphic Artist and Grid Systems in Graphic Design. Becoming a Graphic Designer seemingly by accident through the loathing of extended writing within his compositions he replaced them with illustrations. After receiving much praise from his teacher began his artistic career. Eventually enrolling onto the Graphic Design Program at the Zurich Gewerbeschule. Establishing a role as the leading practitioner and theorist of swiss style by the 1950s, his style draws on the constructivism as well as utilizing a grid-based design purged of extraneous illustrations an subjective feeling. He died in Zurich in 1996 after a life of working, designing and teaching.

Using simple, sans-serif typefaces to clearly translate the movements one key principles. However it also means that if the grid system is broken on rare occasions, then it gives a different finish that can pull focus more dramatically across the page or change the hierarchy entirely.

For this project I created two final outcomes to serve as a reflection and reimagination of a specified art movement that I chose, Choosing swiss style (International Typographic Style) I made strong use of the grid system to create my outcomes, paired alongside block colours and shapes to offer a sharp contrast and an overall impactful and striking finish. Alongside visually displaying what the art movement is about I have also filled the posters with some vital information into what makes Swiss Style so unique, alongside a well known artist who created many swiss style works.

Hybography

Doctor becomes consumed consumed consumed by alter ego

Within a project whereby I created a poster containing only six words, the poster is used to describe, very briefly the events that occur within the novel “The Curious Case of Jekyll and Hyde using the six words to describe what happens and the actual hybrid letter forms to translate the taking over of the evil hyde from innocent professor jekyll. This was achieved by using a script font at the start and it slowly being overtaken, “consumed” by the more intimidating, egyptian style font used to represent the personality of Hyde.

MOVEMENT

For this project I was tasked with creating my own movement, alongside creating my own ideological movement I had to create a memorable tag that described my movement, an "ISM" that would be used as a label for the issue that my movement was representing. I have created awareness for my movement by creating a short animation within Adobe After Effects alongside using a combination of other Adobe programmes including; Adobe Photoshop, Adobe Illustrator and Adobe Premiere Pro to assist in the creation of my animation. creating a flowing animation that utilised the different tools and techniques available within Adobe After Effects, for my animation I used a technique called "Kinetic Typography" making the text move about the screen and flow smoothly to create both a visually soothing and informative style.

Using both typography as well as illustration to convey my message I utilised block colours and a deadpan approach in order to translate the urgency of my topic, the over-the-top, almost jokey approach worked effectively with an overdramatic voiceover displaying my "ISM" as simply, the worst thing to plague mankind.

PROTEST!

As part of a cross discipline project I created the full content needed for a protest about illegal diamond mining throughout the world. Using blood red and shiny clear blues within my colour scheme coupled alongside striking imagery. For this project I created placards, manifestoes and drafts for visual oxymorons. A mix of both digital and physical mediums were used throughout my protest field project.

The time has come for the reappraisal of unsustainable diamond mining in conflict areas in Africa we the undersigned have had enough of the exploitation of the citizens we believe the this issue has been hidden from the public eye for to long down with forced mining up with exposing companies our vision of the world would be better if forced labour was stopped using our design and illustration skills we intend to raise awareness of the issue we will do this by creating a social media campaign along with posters and apparel

OUR MANTRA IS:

THE TRUE PRICE OF DIAMONDS.

THE BLOOD DIAMOND MANIFESTO

For this project, I have created three A2 print based Spreads. The purpose of these spreads is to engage in visual metaphor to enhance the impact of a chosen article, my spreads concern an article corresponding to modern slavery. As visual metaphor was so vital to my spreads I delved deep into the design aspects, creating my own typeface with a classical neon aesthetical and black backgrounds to contrast, alongside low impact night photography to support my concepts. this also gave off connotations of “for sale” signs in an attempt to showcase how modern slavery is more hidden in plain sight and how the slavery is not indifferent from a shop, and the products are not vegetables and milk, but real, human lives.

modest. Having taken vows of chastity and povfriars in a village near the Araguaia River, where the Amazon forest has been cut down.

The other two friars are priests. He is not. He coordinates a national campaign against slave labor. In his spare time he also wades into land disputes on the side of the poor. It is dangerous his colleagues and more than a thousand associated peasants have been murdered, rarely with Russia is another hot spot. The number of slaves there is uncertain, but outside of the sex trade it may amount to 500,000, giving Russia one of the largest slave populations in the world. The phenomenon is based not on the country’s old habit of state slavery but on the greed, cynicism, and criminality that have characterized Russian society for the past 25 years. The victims are primarily foreigners, lured by middlemen. Once they arrive, their documents are confiscated and they are put to work in construction, textile manufacturing, ship repair, quarries, and farming. It has been widely reported that forced laborers were engaged in the preparations for the 2014 Winter Olympics, in Sochi.

Systemic slavery? Hardly has a single problem with it, as do Peru, Ghana,

Emirates, Pakistan, and Cambodia.

& summary

For my App Design project I have created an app capable of connecting phone speakers together using short range bluetooth, name "Speakur". The app contains many different themes in order to achieve a large focus on the customisation aspect, allowing for a larger target audience and overall, greater revenue stream. The app also uses equalisers to display how the large number of phones are allocated within the different bands of the audio spectrum, within either a bass, mid, or treble area.

During my app design project I created a large wire frame to navigate the app, making a large variation of themes accompanied by a plethora of settings pages suited to every potential user of the "Speekur" app.

Different screens and themes present within the app use different mediums of design to acheive their finish, utilising illustration as well photography alongside typography. Containing both sleek, black finishesh as well as colourful, striking colour schemes.

I ensured that the app contains both a combination of consistency and spontinaitety in order to keep the app exciting for users.
